After 3 decades of neoliberalism and neoconservatism in Western democracies social and economic systems should be stabilized again which means heightened respect for democratic values like human rights, international law environment and a just distribution of power and income. Since Feb 2010 stock market prices are correlated positively with these values. Democratic impulses currently come from the Arab democratization movements whereas western democracies are plagued by a "dumbing down" (Paul Krugman, NYTime Mar 10, 2011, "Dumbing Deficits Down") of our political debate as described by this author in nearly all of his recent NYTime columns. The dumbing down of our political debate is narrowly linked with the ups and downs of the "Republicans ... archconservative political shock troops in the Tea Party" (see below) which as a masspsychological phenomenon probably is also in sync with the ups and downs of the Arab democratization movement.

So stocks went up in the week at the end of which Egypt's former president Mubarak stepped down Feb 11 and during the same time the Republicans shock troop had to face some "surprise setbacks":

During the days after Mubarak was ousted it first came to a deepening of the democratic process in Egypt and in addition the protests reached Libya. All these developments proved to be helpful for stocks. Only on Feb 15 there was a down day for stocks. The reason for that was that in Iran the political reaction showed up what proved to be a harbinger of a broader development which was to start on Feb 18.

The democratic Arab movement must have been pretty threatening to the dissociated personality parts of the global population. I call these personality parts alter egos. They stem from traumatic experience during the early life time of people. Because of this people loyal to the old abusing Arab elites could be mobilized against the democratic movements (see below "hatred rally" in Iran, Kadhafi loyalists, Yemen loyalists). Even Kadhafi's son Saif al-Islam Kadhafi who until then had a reasonable democratic image joined this reactionary movement. Psychohistorians call this process "growth panic". It began on Feb 18. Since it is still in force stock prices therefore have not recovered until now to the high of Feb 18. Parallel to this movement in the US a battle between ultraconservatives in Wisconsin and Ohio and unions intensified as the conservatives aimed to deprive unions of the right of collective bargaining.

There you could find on Feb 18 for the first time a photograph of the Obama daughters which together with the text belonging to the picture can be interpreted as a puberty crisis ("Malia and Sasha won't be on Facebook anytime soon" and the daughters do not seem to be happy with the decision of their parents) . Since our attitudes as adults are linked to our childhood traumas it is understandable that this photography could be found in the slideshow on any day since Feb 18 until Mar 11. Only since Mar 12 this motive may be fading away. Their names are still mentioned but the photography has changed:

On Mar 10 the sideward movement of stock prices since Feb 24 came to an end when stock prices broke through the lower border of the channel. This happened after the big win of the ultra conservatives in Wisconsin in the union issue which happened before the opening of the stock markets. As a response stock prices slumped down right at the beginning of the session. In my eyes what happened in Wisconsin shows that the political systems of the Western democracies are not able to solve their problems. This can also be seen in other fields, for example the issue of bank regulations. The banks still can behave in the same way as before the near meltdown of the financial system in 2008.

In Wisconsin, GOP maneuver pushes anti-union bill forward

Senate Republicans omit financial provisions from legislation to curb public workers' collective bargaining rights, skirting a requirement that a quorum be present.

By Abby Sewell, Los Angeles Times

March 10, 2011

Senate Republicans in Wisconsin used a surprise legislative maneuver to advance a bill that would strip collective bargaining rights from most public sector workers, a move accomplished without the presence of 14 Democratic senators who fled the state to stall the measure.

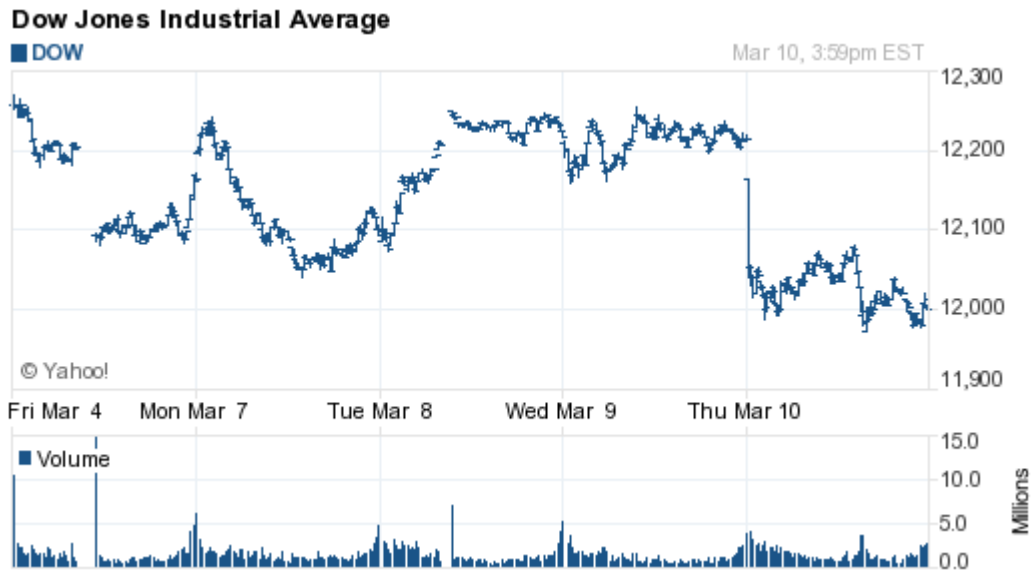

Republicans voted 18 to 1 Wednesday night to pass the non-fiscal provisions of Gov. Scott Walker's budget repair bill, including those that would eliminate or severely limit collective bargaining rights for most public employees.

By omitting the financial provisions from the bill, Republicans were able to bypass a requirement that a quorum be present to vote on fiscal legislation. When all 14 Democratic state senators fled to Illinois on Feb. 17, they denied the GOP majority a quorum and thereby stymied action on the initiative.

Republicans in the Wisconsin state Senate approved sweeping curbs on collective bargaining by public employees on Wednesday in an abrupt and accelerated vote that caught many Democrats by surprise.
